

Self-Help and Information Service

Welcome to the Justice Access Centre Self-Help and Information Service. We can provide general information about the law, but only a lawyer can provide legal advice. Please take a moment to look at this list to find out the difference between legal advice and legal information.

Legal Information

We can:

- >> Answer questions about procedures in court.
- >> Show you online and print resources.
- >> Give you information about and refer you to out-of court options such as mediation.
- >> Provide available Provincial Court (Family) and Supreme Court forms and instructions.
- >> Tell you if you have filled in the required sections of your court form so that they may be filed in the registry.
- >> Make a photocopy of the court documents you prepared at the centre.
- >> Tell you about free legal courses that are available to the public.
- >> Provide you with information on how to access free legal advice.
- >> Book an appointment at a free legal advice clinic if you are eligible.

Legal Advice

We cannot:

- >> Tell you whether or not you should be bringing your case to court.
- >> Tell you if you have a good case.
- >> Give you legal opinions and advice about your case.
- >> Tell you which documents to file in court.
- >> Tell you what words to use in your forms.
- >> Tell you who should be served as parties in your documents.
- >> Tell you what to say in court or at a hearing.
- >> Talk to a judge or master on your behalf.
- >> Interpret legal advice for you.
